The paper discusses the threats to networks of resource-limited things such as wireless sensors and the different mechanisms used to deal with them. A novel approach to threat detection is proposed. MOTHON is a movement-assisted threat detection system using mobility to enhance a global threat assessment and provide a separate physical secure channel to deliver collected information.

Słowa kluczowe: client honeypot, Internet of Things, intrusion detection, wireless sensor network